Moroccan dream

L'Amandier is a new boutique resort opening in the foothills of Morocco's Atlas Mountains in January 2016. Set among 12 acres of citrus groves, almond trees, and bougainvillea, the property has been designed by British architect Nick Gowing and enjoys 360-degree views over the neighboring Toubkal National Park, olive groves, and gardens. Launching with just six suites, each with a private terrace, the resort also offers an infinity pool and an all-season tennis court. An outdoor yoga studio is set to open later in 2016, as are two luxurious rooftop penthouses. Definitely one for traveling's early adopters.

From £165 ($254) per night including breakfast

Do Tri this

The newly opened Tri is Sri Lanka's first contemporary, sustainable luxury design hotel. Tri's 11 suites spiral a six-acre island hill on the shores of picturesque Koggala Lake. Eight suites, three with private pools, are integrated into the landscape, while the remaining three are on the top deck of a central water tower. Among Tri's green credentials are "living" roofs planted with grasses and bamboo (nourished, like the gardens, by harvested rainwater), solar panels, and ionizing (non-chemical) pool filters. The resort also features a spectacular 68-foot cantilevered pool with decks and terraces, a treetop yoga deck, treatment rooms, and a steam cabin. From $250 per night half board (the hotel is also available for exclusive private hire), www.trilanka.com

Hit the road...

"America's cities have a lot to offer, but it's the in-between places away from the spotlight – mountains, plains, and crossroad towns – that are the beating heart of the country," says Sam Highley. And he should know: for the past five years his company All Roads North has been organizing luxury road trips tailor-made for intrepid travelers. From New England to the islands of South Carolina and beyond, whichever America you'd like to explore, Highley and his team will create your itinerary and organize transport, "a classic American muscle car to a Tesla and everything in-between."
